YOU HAVE BEEN WARNED

The following is a collection of communications between two members of the R&D department in the GEO.

Dear Dr [REDACTED],

I realize how low the chances of Operation Greyhound succeeding quickly are. The MEG is way too powerful, even with our [REDACTED] thousand-strong military. They have so many outposts, it could take decades. Operation Greyhound will not be as successful as you think it will be. Even worse, if they use this time to remount an offensive, we would be no more with our military scattered around so much.

Best Regards, Lieutenant [REDACTED]

Thank you Lieutenant [REDACTED]

I understand your concern, however, we have been planning this operation for years now. How do you suppose we change Greyhound up?

- Dr [REDACTED]

Following up on your previous message, Dr [REDACTED],

Well, I'm sure you remember experiment 207-A, the one that created ER-E1. I propose we make a bunch of these instances and release them near MEG outposts. Of course, we'll need to make sure none of them can reach our base on Level 535. But other than that, the plan has no flaws whatsoever. - Lieutenant [REDACTED]
