

The Arrow Saga-Author's Note

As you read this series of short stories, the reader may find some of the events unbelievable. However, keep a few things in mind along the way.

1) While Orion Aerospace LTD may be a small, young company, the parent company, Mohr Machine Works, is not. Founded in 2782, it is an old, well established company. A prime supplier of military hardware to the AFFC, it is well known in the Inner Sphere.

2) The encounters with prominent leaders of various star nations should be accepted, as the finances involved in sales of ships and fighters can easily be in the trillions of C-Bills. This requires authorization by those leaders. While some readers may have the view of ministers handling these transactions, Orion Aerospace is a relatively young company, not yet known to these persons. Consequently, these leaders are involved.

3) In his role as protagonist, Major Johannes Mohr is directly involved, explaining and demonstrating the products sold by Orion Aerospace. As the 'de-facto' leader of the 'unit', he is also directly involved in the decision-making processes of said unit.

4) The technologies involved may also seem incredible. For that, I refer you to my first book, Technical Readout 3062, which can be found in this wiki. A mixture of 20th century Terran and recovered Star League era technologies have yielded these aerospace fighters, dropships and jumpships that have features not found in units described in Battlespace, Technical Readout 3057, and Aerotech 2, all published by FASA.

With these things in mind, explore the depicted events that take place between 3057 and 3068, encompassing the FedCom Civil War, published by WKGames and FANPRO. The actions of the unit do not affect the outcome, merely describing it's involvement.

I hope I have done a good job writing this series of short stories, and also hope the reader finds them enjoyable.
