

20190807 Tagalog Global Xenoglossia Viktor Nonong Medrano

The Tagalog Global Xenoglossia is a strange phenomenon. Today, over 7 billion people on this Earth know Tagalog at least at a basic level without conventional learning, but rather through instantaneous learning. Is some kind of Dark Trickster God responsible? Does a god have a sense of humour? Why was Tagalog chosen, and not Mandarin or English or Spanish or Esperanto? Is it some kind of Pacific Islander Vengeance? Tagalog belongs to the Austronesian language family, as do Malaysian, Indonesian, Ilokano, Cebuano, Hawaiian, Tahitian, Samoan, Fijian, Malagasy, Maori, and many, many other languages. Is Tagalog some kind of medicine to those speakers of weaker languages? Is it some kind of teaching tool?

I went to Protestant Pentecostal church for some time with my family. In that denomination, xenoglossia is important. Pentecostals believe that xenoglossia happened before in history. Did it happen in prehistory? It is learning language instantaneously. Will it happen again?

I know that many people are afraid of Tagalog, today. Many Hong Kong Cantonese show fear of Tagalog. It could be understandable.
