

20191130 Existence as a Gradation

Viktoro Medrano

Recently, my thinking is that existence has a kind of gradation, like different shades of grey. Some people and some objects and some events seem to exist more than others, like foreground and background maybe.

Recent viewing of videos on the Web has me also thinking again about the Buddhistic view of Māyā, the Illusion of Everything, True Reality being hidden. The holodeck in the Star Trek shows and the so-called matrix in The Matrix franchise make me wonder whether the whole universe is just a Divine Simulation. Young people know about computer games as simulations. Perhaps, Creator Beings created the whole universe as a simulation. Physicists know that most everything is just empty space. Are humans, other animals, fungi, plants, rocks, air, water, et cetera just simuloids?

Computer programs often have glitches or bugs. Does our Reality Apparent have bugs, too?

